When I run the script locally it works perfectly but when I put it on our webserver, it gets a 502 gateway timeout. I have pinpointed the issue to the API call. It seems to hang when it's connecting to Twitter. I am not very familiar with Twitter, but it looks like it's trying to make a GET request and timeout. So I've wrapped the Twitter API call in a curl statement to ensure that the call is making it's way to Twitter and not the caller script. Here is what the wrapped curl looks like: curl -D- \ -X GET \ "" \ -H "Host: api.twitter.com" \ -H "Authorization: Bearer %s" \ -H "Cache-Control: no-cache" \ -H "Pragma: no-cache" \ -H "User-Agent: Twitter PHP/1.0.2" \ --compressed This call runs perfectly fine. The call that is running the problem looks like this:

$twitter ba244e880a
