With Flickr, you can keep a clean and beautiful private space for all your photos. You can also contribute to our community, remix, and organize your photos. You can even sell and hire out your photos! A quick intro to Creative Commons licensing. Start with the absolute basics: This account is associated with an image set for Creative Commons attribution (aka "attribution required"), which means you can share your images with the world, but you can't make money off them. To sell your images and pay for hosting, you'll need a different account. Note that Flickr itself is not part of the Creative Commons organization, and so, while the Creative Commons trademarks are used on Flickr (which is a part of Yahoo! ) they are not affiliated with Creative Commons in any way, and you should not assume that Flickr is part of the organization. You may have noticed that the photos on the home page are also protected by Creative Commons. This means that you cannot re-use them for
