vengeful nap after being revived, but after waking up he is found by a mysterious woman who tells him that he is a pawn in a deadly game. Before she can finish the sentence, the pawn disappears from in front of him and instead, a teen girl is standing next to him. If I were you, don't accept what she says at face value, she is not what she seems to be. – He doesn't take her advice. Some time later, on the outskirts of the city, the pawn returns, with the girl, who is now dead. – Once again, Asha's friend offers words of warning, but this time he ignores it, and he accepts her help. The pawn arrives in a street where other teens are hanging out. The girl introduces herself as Aba, and she says that she's been assigned to help him. The pawn accepts, and they walk for a while before the girl suggests that they go to the playground to hang out.
