"Democratic People's Republic of Korea" is the official name of the North Korean regime. In the early 2000s the government began implementing a plan to bring the country up to date technologically to modernise the country. The North Korean leadership has therefore been technologically and politically 'reformed' to such an extent that the country has become a (relatively) modern, peaceful and educated dictatorship. The major newspapers, radio stations, television channels and the internet are completely state run and only distribute information from the government. Military forces: Military forces are one of the most important aspects of the North Korean regime. The military force is composed of a number of armed factions and the regular army and is generally under the control of the party-military-security apparatus. Some of the main military factions include the Korean People's Army (KPA), the Korean People's Air Force (KPAF), the Korean People's Navy (KPNE) and the Korean People's Internal Security Forces (KPSF). The Korean People's Army (KPA) is the army of the Democratic People's Republic of Korea. It is mainly responsible for the defence of the country from external enemies and internal subversion. The KPA◆
